Rules That Verdict Cannot Be Appealed

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—The attorney general's office said Saturday that a municipal court verdict acquitting a theater owner at Fort Smith on a lottery charge in connection with the staging of "bank nights" could not be appealed by the state.

Assistant Attorney General Guy E. Williams said the state could not appeal from a justice court decision clearing a defendant. An appeal could have been taken to the supreme court for a test of the question had the defendant been convicted in municipal court and then acquitted on an appeal to circuit court, Williams said.

The Fort Smith theater owner was arrested after the attorney general had ruled that "bank nights" were lotteries. The municipal court at Fort Smith disagreed with the opinion. Cash awards are given to the holders of "lucky numbers" at "bank night" performances, conditioned on the holders being in the theater at the time the numbers are read.

Peace Proposals in Strike Areas Over U.S. Pushed

Electrical Workers Are Debating Arbitration Plan

GOVERNOR ON SCENE

Executive Threatens to Use Military Force to End Rioting

By the Associated Press
Peace proposals were studied Monday on two strike fronts while police were alert in another section to quell any violence outbreak.

Negotiations to end a strike of union electrical workers at Toledo was at a standstill as strikers debated acceptance to the arbitration plan.

Employees of an engine manufacturing concern ended a 41 day strike at Freeport, Ill., upon acceptance of a compromise agreement.

Swath arbitration of Ohama's street car strike under threat of military punishment for realtor leaders was decreed Monday by Governor R. L. Cochran.

Death Reported

Arriving by plane in the area where martial law was declared following strike riots which resulted in two deaths, Cochran handed two ultimatums to employee and company representatives. One specified they accept his six-point arbitration program within 11 hours; the other that arbitration must be completed by midnight Thursday.

"If either party declines it must be responsible to the military authorities," he warned in a formal statement which he signed, not as governor, but as "commander in chief of the Nebraska national guard in an area under martial law."

After the meeting, street car company representatives assured Governor Cochran they would present his demands to the company's directors at least an hour before the deadline he set, 10 a. m. (central standard time).

The second death resulted from strike riots last week occurred just as the meeting called by Cochran ended. Dewey R. McCoy, 38, died of head and chest wounds said to have been inflicted by police during a battle Friday night. John Duster, 24, was the first victim to die, and more than 150 other persons were injured.

Martial law was declared over the entire quarter of a million population of Omaha and South Omaha Saturday by Acting Governor Walter H. Jurgensen after local authorities applied for troops to crush three days of rioting in South Omaha. Eighteen hundred guardsmen ruled the city Monday and no serious violence was reported since their occupation. Truckloads of guardsmen cruised the city, but no guard or picket lines were established. A military court was called for Monday to try a dozen alleged violators of a military ban on liquor sales after 6 p. m. daily.

TVA Act Is Headed for Supreme Court

Youth Identified as Corpse Alive

Officers Back Where They Started in Newport Mystery

NEWPORT, Ark.—(AP)—Officers here are right back where they started in their attempt to solve the mystery surrounding the discovery of a dismembered body last March with the announcement that George Gibbs, Jackson county youth previously identified as the corpse, had been reported alive.

A partly decomposed human head was found on the Missouri Pacific right-of-way here early last March. Later other parts of the body were discovered a mile east of the scene.

Last month Sheriff Lee Reid said a man known to him as Ralph Jackson identified the body positively as that of his nephew, George Gibbs, who had disappeared. Sheriff Reid said Jackson made his identification from a rifle and a vanity case found near the dismembered body which he said belonged to his nephew.

Saturday Gibbs was reported alive to the story of Mrs. J. M. Fortenberry of Diaz, Ark., that the body was that of a Florida hitchhiker who had stopped at her husband's store some time in January.

Sheriff Reid said he would continue the investigation.

ARKANSAS IS HIGH

Big Property Damage Is Reported From Texas Floods

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Torrential week-end rains dosing wide-spread damage over Arkansas prompted the weather bureau here to issue new flood warnings Monday on the state's principal streams.

The Arkansas river is rising to threatening heights for the seventh time this year, following a five-inch rain in eastern Oklahoma and only slightly less heavy precipitation in many sections of Arkansas.

Highway traffic has been disrupted and water stood in streets of a number of widely separated towns in Arkansas Monday.

Big Property Damage
AUSTIN, Texas.—(AP)—Flood-weary Texas counted up an enormous property damage Monday as receding flood waters in the central part of the state allowed relief work and searchers for missing persons to start.

In the southern territory, lowland dwellers and farmers watched with alarm streams whose rising waters portended further destructive marches over lush areas.

Hundreds still were marooned after the floods had driven them from their homes.

Twelve were known dead and fears were expressed that as the waters slowly returned to normal, more bodies would be found.

In Austin, pounded by a roaring Colorado river of record height, damage was estimated at more than $2,500,000 by Mayor Tom Miller. The

YOUR HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Tongue Is Important in Checking Ills.

For many years, doctors have considered the tongue important in determining ailments. In fact, back in 1885, doctors invariably began their physical examinations by looking at it.

We know now, however, that they put a good deal more stress on the condition of the tongue than was really necessary; even though there is still a great deal to be learned from this extraordinary organ.

In scarlet fever, for example, the tongue looks like a strawberry. In typhoid, the tongue is usually bright red and moist.

A thin white coating or furring on the tongue is not an alarming sign, however, since it is fairly common in people who smoke a great deal, or who breathe mostly through the mouth.

The tongue's appearance is said to be most important in relationship to diseases of stomach and intestines. In this connection, however, it is not an absolutely certain sign that something is wrong, but only an indication.

There are, however, certain diseases of the tongue which give it an unusual appearance. Some people, for instance, have hairy tongues; in others, the tongue has a mottled appearance which makes them resemble a map. Aply, this condition is called geographic tongue.

If the tongue trembles slightly when it is extended, disturbances of the nervous system may be indicated. This condition is likely to be noted in cases of chronic alcoholism and in general paralysis.

There are some diseases in which one-half of the tongue becomes very large, the other half remaining small. A glandular disturbance, usually reflected in the body as a whole, is frequently responsible.

In certain blood disorders, the tongue is soft and easily damaged. When this is the case, a bite of the tongue brings on a large blue-black blister, which may last for several days.

Children whose tongue is coated because of common infectious diseases can keep their mouths clean by using mouth washes. In some cases, even chewing gum helps to clean off the debris.

A BOOK A DAY

Fashions Wistful Tale of Childhood—Author Recreates Emotions and Moods of Youth.

To tell a story of childhood must be in some ways one of the hardest of all literary tasks. For childhood is a strange, enchanted time, in which what actually happens blends so queerly with what is imagined, or hoped for, or dreamed of, that fact and imagination become blended and almost indistinguishable.

Robert Francis seems to have a sympathetic understanding of this fact; and his long novel, "The Wolf at the Door," is a dreamy, mystic chronicle in which the narrator seems to drift through the years in the strange, transfiguring light of early youth.

It tells about three little girls who grew up in home of a French peasant some 50 years ago; and if you long for an abundance of straightforward action in your novels, you might well leave it alone, for it is a story of moods and emotions rather than of incidents.

The three girls grow up amid scenes of extreme poverty, and they dream the dreams that childhood is heir to, and one of them grows up to an old-maidhood, another marries a roving vagabond, and the third goes to school and brings her story to an end in the first five games Schoolboy Rowe pitched to decisions this season. He won two and lost three, all five by the margin of one run.

Rev. Jewel Leaman attended church school for ten minutes and analyzed four of reactions to your voice.

If you speak more loudly than is necessary to fill a room, practice speaking softly. If, at times, people don't seem to be able to hear and understand what you say, raise your voice a trifle and pay particular attention to enunciation.

To mutter and mumble not only ruins whatever charm you have but is decidedly bad manners. You have not right to make others strain their ears to hear what you have to say. Speak clearly and pronounce your words correctly.

Whenever you are alone, read aloud the daily papers, magazines and books. Reading aloud, more than any other one thing you can do at home, helps to strengthen your voice, teaches you to speak clearly and, incidentally, develops your vocabulary.

Try never to raise your voice to the shouting stage. In an argument, the one who keeps calm and speaks softly has a decided advantage. Furthermore, this she who earns a deserved reputation for calm and poise. This, of course, doesn't mean that you should talk in monotone. A voice, to be lovely, must have light and shade—high spots and low. Keep yours as calm as possible, but do not control it to the point of making it dull and monotonous. By reading aloud and by listening to people who do speak beautifully, you'll learn to strike a happy medium.

Summer Sweethearts

By Mabel McElliot © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

prism of her brown felt hat. Her brown gloves, her slim brown shoes, were perfection.

They saw Evelyn Vincent just then, heard her agreeable deep English voice and saw that a man was with her. His back was turned. Katharine could just see the gray topcoat and the gleam of a fair head. She was unpleasantly affected by the prospect of having to talk to a stranger. It seemed to her she was so dead tired that any further effort would be devastating.

But when Miss Vincent turned, smiling, Katharine saw that the man was Dr. Kaye.

Relief flooded her weary spirit. "John," she stammered. "But I didn't know you two knew each other."

Miss Vincent explained. They had met on the boat in June, returning from Havre. Dr. Kaye had prescribed for her since.

Victor Strykhurst was pleased, Katharine could see that. The fact that John Kaye knew Katharine's traveling companion seemed to make things "more regular." Bertine would have to admit that.

Katharine hadn't known, hadn't remotely suspected that John was coming down to see her off. Now, naturally enough, he walked with her down the great length of the platform while her father gallantly followed with Evelyn Vincent.

There were white-coated porters in every doorway; most of the beds were already made up. Katharine was conscious now of the stir and movement attendant upon departures. It wasn't a dream. She was really leaving them all.

She talked with a feverish brightness to her companion. If you talked hard and fast enough you hadn't time to think. She found her compartment full of flowers—button chrysanthemums in wine color and white, and a knot of gardenias in a twist of silver paper. John's card lay on them.

"I didn't know whether I'd be able to get away or not," he said with some diffidence.

Katharine felt her lips trembling and smiled very gayly to hide it. There were tears burning at the back of her eyelids.

"You are too good to me." "Not too good, Katharine!" She had never heard that note in his voice before. Evelyn Vincent and her father were moving briskly up and down, talking animatedly. They had the whole big draughtily platform, for the moment, to themselves.

JOHN KAYE bent close to the slim, fair girl in tweeds. She was planning the gardenias to her fur scarf with fingers that shook a trifle.

"You know what I want to tell you, Katharine?" She fluttered her lashes downward in an instinctive movement toward flight. His hand caught, imprisoned hers.

"Don't you?" Her voice was very faint. How could she stop him? "No—no, I don't think so."

"I can't let you go away without asking you if I have a chance, Kitty."

This—if this was terrible! She hadn't dreamed of anything like it. Zoe with her foolish, irresponsible chatter had somehow hit on the truth.

THE NEW DEAL IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Contrary to the dope other experts may have tried to pour into your pink ears, this correspondent is forced to report to you in all honesty that the U. S. Supreme Court NRA decision was neither a crushing blow nor a great strategic victory for Mr. Roosevelt.

Leaving aside those possibilities which really shouldn't be predicted, because they may not happen, the essentials of the political situation have changed very little in this last exciting month. These things are still true:

1. Mr. Roosevelt is the only outstanding presidential candidate.
2. The Republicans haven't found a popular candidate.
3. Chances for an effective third party are more dismal than at any other time in the last year.

Most progressive leaders figure on supporting Roosevelt in 1936 against a probable coalition of conservative Republicans and Democrats. Meanwhile, the president continues to veer perceptibly toward the left.

Hoover's Act Flaps
 The key to a political situation is to be found only in the emotions, fears, and aspirations of the voters. Thus, you can get a partial slant by observing the outbursts of popular recurrent public remarks of Mr. Hoover.

You haven't noticed any? Well, the human eye and the human ear have their limitations.

It's the job of party leaders to present Republicanism in a new, attractive package. Since neither major party is more than a name and a political machine, the job is a tough one.

Of course, that doesn't mean that it can't be done. But popular disillusionment with the Roosevelt program, a prerequisite, is just beginning to tell.

Promises Hold Voters
 Roosevelt remains the great "promiser." Handicapped by the fragrant memory of Mr. Hoover's promises and what happened to them, the Republicans can neither out-promise F. D. R. nor—as yet—persuade the masses of voters that he isn't trying to keep those lovely promises and to some degree succeeding.

Failure of the populace to get excited about the death of NRA was the chief factor behind Roosevelt's failure.

Just a Mild Threat
 The conservative coalition against Roosevelt, which seems to be the chief dream of President Jouett Shouse of the American Liberty League, isn't likely to be a serious threat unless there's a business slump.

Its present, popular appeal seems very small, though it is likely to be supported by the bulk of business and financial interests. Plenty of officers in the movement, but not many priest-factor behind Roosevelt's failures.

President Forms New NRA System

Appoints James L. O'Neill,
New York Banker, as Acting Administrator

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Holding forth
"a possibility of future legislation," President Roosevelt formally created the "stop-gap" NRA with special provisions for helping business maintain "fair competition" practices Sunday.
He named James L. O'Neill, vice president of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York as acting administrator of the midget recovery unit and created two major divisions.

A Division of Business Co-operation was set up under Prentiss L.
Cooney "to aid in the voluntary maintenance by trade and industrial groups of standards of fair competition, in the elimination of unfair competition in the employment of labor or in trade practices."

A Division of Review was created under Leon C. Marshall "to review the effects of code operation."

Mr. Roosevelt named George L. Berry as assistant to O'Neill to represent labor. Berry, president of the International Pressmen's Union, has served since early NRA days as a code administrator.

O'Neill, in half a year with NRA, has served as code control officer.
Cooney was code administrator director in the old set-up and Marshall a member of the recovery board.
O'Neill, Cooney and Marshall were ordered by Mr. Roosevelt to reduce "as rapidly as possible" the 5,000-member personnel of the old NRA which expired Sunday night. But they were given an added command to "protect the continuity of the administration for its future usefulness in effectuating the policies and purposes of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as amended."

Girl Scouts

The Girl Scout Troop No. 1 held their weekly meeting Friday, June 14, in the basement of the Methodist church.

It was definitely decided to hold meetings each Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 in the church and all members were urged to attend each meeting.

Books on wild flowers and butterflies were distributed among each patrol by the leaders and the Girl Scouts intend to make wild flowers notebooks containing descriptions and pressed specimens.

Plans for a swimming party Wednesday, June 19 at the Pines were discussed. Each patrol is expected to furnish transportation for its members and each girl is requested to bring a picnic lunch.

Several girls volunteered to secure information concerning the Girl Scout camp to be held this summer near Hot Springs. The meeting was then adjourned.

ledges and auto steering wheels, using vari-colored powders to bring these out. The "signatures" of criminals will be photographed with special cameras, or "lifted" with adhesive tape.

Fake murders and kidnappings will be staged. "Oscar," the dummy, will be found prostrate on the floor. Nearby may be a gun, note, blood stain, scrap of paper or similar clue. After the students have investigated the "crime" and prepared their solutions, the instructors will hold a post-mortem on the evidence.

Getting the Evidence

"We teach our men to get all the evidence that will stand in courts," Hoover says. The bureau's record of 94 per cent convictions in difficult cases tried testifies to the skillful training.

Learning to manipulate all the high powered weapons needed to cope with hoodlums, the students will use a large pistol gallery in the basement of the justice building and the rifle range of the Quantico marine post a few miles away.

Not all of the training is spectacular. There must be hours of digging study on evidence in embezzlements, frauds, perjury, false claims and other complex fields of law enforcement.

Auditory Tests

While the students are studying, a loud crash may occur in the next room. Half a minute later a second crash may follow; and in a minute a third. By this time the federal instructor will relieve the tension by announcing that the noise is an auditory test, and will ask a detailed report.

Such tests are important, Hoover explains, because they teach careful observance and questioning of witnesses.

Another field is that of the crime laboratories. There students learn that the watermark on a paper, the handwriting, the typewriting, a small piece of fiber or measurements of the scene of the crime, may be the only key to its solution.

Hoover welcomes the new move as coordinating federal and local efforts to combat crime.
